Mr. Jones was very old. He was English, but he lived in Fujairah for 20 years. He was a strange and quiet man, and he did not like gadgets at all!

In the kitchen, he had a small, old cooker and a noisy white fridge that was nearly as old as Mr. Jones. He didn't have a microwave or even a can opener.

Mr. Jones had a big, old bicycle which he rode to the park twice a week. He couldn't drive a car and he didn't like riding on the bus. He loved his bicycle. It was his most useful invention and he cleaned it every day.

Eating customs around the world

We are learning all about different countries in science this term. It is interesting learning about different customs for eating that they have in other countries. That is, the food they eat and the way they eat it.

Did you know that in Japan, people don't eat soup with a spoon? They pick up the bowl of soup and drink it, like drinking from a cup. In Mexico, they eat tacos with their hands, but in Chile they prefer fried chips, and they eat them with a knife and fork.

In Alaska people wear gloves when it's cold, but they never eat food with their gloves on! When in China, you should leave some food on the plate to show that you are full and not hungry anymore.

In Ethiopia, they don't even have plates when they eat. They put all the food onto some large round bread and then use it to pick up the food with their hands. That sounds really interesting and quite delicious. I would like to try eating that food.
