From the majestic Arabian oryx to the elusive sand cat, these creatures have adapted to survive in harsh conditions. However, human activities threaten their existence.

One such threat is littering. Discarded plastic bottles and wrappers not only spoil the natural beauty of the desert but also pose a danger to animals. Many creatures mistake plastic for food, leading to choking or digestive issues. Additionally, pollution from factories and vehicles further degrades their habitat, endangering their survival.

Fortunately, there are steps we can take to protect our wildlife. By reducing, reusing, and recycling, we can minimize the amount of waste that ends up in the desert. Participating in clean-up campaigns and spreading awareness about the importance of conservation can also make a difference.
