Lessons 3-4 Greetings

- 1 Write a paragraph about meeting and greeting in your culture. You can use the writing frame to help you.

In Palestine the formal way to greet each other is by shaking hands. Foreign visitors can just say hello and nod their heads but you don't need to shake hands with them. In a conversation, when you are speaking or listening to a Palestinian person, it is important to look in the eyes. This shows respect and paying attention. Don't interrupt and never raise your voice. (look away)

- 2 Find and correct the spelling and grammatical mistakes in this text.

In New Zealand the formal way to greet each other is by shake hands and smiling. You should use a New Zealander's surname and not their first name, until the person suggests it.

When greeting a New Zealand Maori, it is important to touch your nose and forehead to the other person's, and shake their hands. This is called 'hongi' and it shows that you understand and respect the Maori culture. When in conversation with a Maori, never say negative things about New Zealand or its people. Treat everyone with respect.

- 2 Think about a time in the year when you give and receive gifts. Write a paragraph about this special day/celebration and describe what you and your family do.

In our lives, there are many occasions that we celebrate and be happy with these events with our families and relatives.

One of the most celebrated days I love and enjoy is the Eid day. On the morning of Eid I go with my family to pray Eid in the mosque, and after we return from the mosque my mother and grandmother prepare a delicious breakfast for the family. Then I take a shower and I wear my new clothes and my brother doing the same. My mother prepares Kaak and Mamoull in the dish, coffee and the chocolate to serve the guests. My mother, my uncle and my grandmother give me and my brother Eidiya. Then guests come to visit us or we go to visit friends.

I love this day so much, and I always I wait for Eid to come
